Independence Day

This Monday our country celebrates the anniversary of the signing of the Declaration of Independence. The last sentence of that document, right before the signatures of our Founding Fathers, contains an important phrase: “with firm reliance on the protection of Divine Providence.”

“With firm reliance on the protection of Divine Providence”: Someone could say, “That doesn’t sound like a declaration of independence; it sounds like a declaration of dependence.”

And they would be right. Our Founding Fathers declared their independence from an oppressive foreign power, but they also declared their dependence on God.

This teaches us an important principle that is almost never stated: freedom and independence are not the same thing. Freedom requires dependence on the only one who can make us free. This is true politically and socially; it is also true (and especially important) morally. The only way we can be free from sin (the most oppressive and tyrannical force that exists) is to be completely dependent on the one who frees us from sin; that is, of course, Our Lord.

May the Lord bless our nation on this weekend, and may we always show our “firm reliance on the protection of Divine Providence.”

Dia de la Independencia

Este lunes nuestro país celebra el aniversario cuando nuestros padres fundadores firmaron la Declaración de Independencia. La última parte de ese documento, justo antes de las firmas de los padres fundadores, contiene una frase importante: “con firme confianza en la protección de la Divina Providencia”.

“Con firme confianza en la protección de la Divina Providencia”: Alguien podría decir: “Eso no suena como una declaración de independencia; suena como una declaración de dependencia.” Y ellos estarían en lo correcto. Nuestros padres fundadores declararon su independencia de un poder opresor, pero también declararon su dependencia de Dios.

Esto nos enseña un principio importante que casi nunca se menciona: la libertad y la independencia no son lo mismo. La libertad exige la dependencia del único que puede hacernos libres. Esto es cierto política y socialmente; también es cierto (y especialmente importante) moralmente. La única forma en que podemos estar libres del pecado (la fuerza más opresiva y tiránica que existe) es dependiendo completamente de quien nos libera del pecado; ese es, por supuesto, Nuestro Señor.

Que el Señor bendiga a nuestra nación en este fin de semana y que siempre mostremos nuestra “firme confianza en la protección de la Divina Providencia”.
